

A Night in the Library

One rainy evening the parents of Carol were off at work, bored and with nothing to do she went to the library. She found one of her favorite books called Percy Jackson and the Olympians. She started reading but the sound of the rain pitter patter on the window made her feel quite sleepy. Before she knew it she found herself inside the book. Before she could ask what was happening she was fighting Greek gods alongside Percy. She was on a quest to find Zeus's lightning bolt.

Then the story started getting weird and not how she remembered it. Things like swimming with dolphins and riding roller coasters at the Mall of America started happening. These are things she hadn't remembered in the book. Then she was back at home where her mother and father were having dinner, but what was strange was they were both at work when Carol left for the library. Startled by the shutting of a heavy door, and the clunking of a big heavy lock she had realized she had only been dreaming.

Now she was locked alone in the library. She decided to sleep with the stuffed animals curled around her for warmth. She kept waking up because the library had no curtains and it was right next to a busy road. She decided she couldn't take it any longer but with no phone and no parents knowing where she was she was stuck.

She then decided she needed to find a way to get out. But how you might wonder? Well she just looked back on one of her favorite books, and then she remembered that there was an emergency exit. Whenever the door closes an alarm sounds. With her great problem solving skills she shoved a large stuffed animal in between the door and the door frame. She then slid out but the big doors were locked as well. She then saw an old school telephone. She remembered how to use it because her grandma had one too. She quickly called her mom. When no one responded she called her dad. He picked up and she told him all about her wild night at the library. When he got to the library he had to call the librarian to come unlock the doors. Then he gave her one gigantic hug and they drove home. When they got back to Carol's house she quickly told her mom that she was okay before she started sharing about her wild night at the library.